BEHIND THE SCENES AT THE MR. K AWARDS

Honoring the area's top small businesses is a big production

As soon as Ewing Marion Kauffman Foundation CEO Wendy Guillies began describing the 2017 winner of the Mr. K Award, Ike Nwabuonwu knew his company had won. ¶ Incorporated in 2005, humble beginnings in a two-room office space, now a 10,000-square-foot headquarters in Kansas City's urban core... ¶ "I knew they were talking about the company, and I got nervous," the CEO of Alpha Energy and Electric Inc. said. ¶ As Nwabuonwu stood on stage in front of nearly 600 people, his smile was understated and humble. Maybe that's because he knew the Mr. K Award, signifying Kansas City's Small Business of the Year, was much bigger than himself. He looked to his table of employees – "the backbone of the company" – and then to David Disney, a senior vice president at JE Dunn Construction, also seated at the table. The construction company had believed in Alpha Energy early on and was an important mentor. ¶ "As the announcement was being made, all I could see was the employees – their hard work, their dedication. They go above and beyond to make this company what it is today. ... And to see them, I knew that this award belongs to them."
